

As a resident of Indiana, I would like to see the FCC turn down the request by the Consumer Bankers of America to weaken our no-call list. Regardless of whether or not I have a existing business with them, it is my phone and I deserve the protection that this law affords me. Furthermore, there is no way that the banks could effective keep track of those customers who established their relationship after this law took effect, nor would they care. They would call everyone. Please do the right thing and turn down this request. Thank you.
